March is Women's History Month

2015 is the 35th anniversary of the Women's History Movement and the National Women's History Project. This year's theme is "Weaving the Stories of Women's Lives." As a celebration of this landmark the 9 women chosen as the 2015 honorees are women who have contributed in their way to "writing women back into history." Here are the top 4 honorees who have written, co-authored and edited more than 60 books between them and which covers the depth and breadth of the multicultural female experience.

The First: Delilah L. Beasley (1867-1934) Historian & Newspaper Columnist—She was the first African American woman to be regularly published in a major metropolitan newspaper and the first author to present the history of African Americans in early California.

The Second: Gladys Tantaquidgeon (1899-2005) Mohegan Medicine Woman, Anthropologist, & Tribal Elder—Her life spanned the entire 20th century. She grew up learning traditional practices, beliefs and herbalism. She completed extensive field research on east coast Indian tribal cultures, herbal medicines and published several books based on her research. In 1931, she co-founded the Tantaquidgeon Museum with her brother & father and it remains the oldest American Indian owned museum in the United States.

The Third: Eleanor Flexner (1908-1995) Eleanor Flexner's groundbreaking 1959 book Century of Struggle: The Women's Right Movement in the United States marked her as a pioneer in the field of Women's Studies. In her publication, Eleanor relates women's physically courageous and politically ingenious work for the vote to other 19th and early 20th century social, labor and reform movements.

The Fourth: Polly Welts Kaufman (1929-Present) Writer, Teacher and Activist for Equality—For Polly it all began with gendered prejudice. Graduating from Brown University in 1951 with a degree in American Studies, she planned to teach high school until she was asked "are you married or going to be married?" Answering "Yes," she was told to look elsewhere for employment. Upon moving to Boston she became an activist in the civil rights movement during the embattled period of school desegregation.

Accounts of the lives of individual women are critically important because they reveal exceptionally strong role models who share a more expansive vision of what a woman can do. These stories of women's lives and the choices they made help young women to think large and bolder and help them understand the female experience. Knowing the achievements, challenges, stereotypes and social assumptions about women can help young women today accomplish new heights.
